After spending nearly two decades in jail in the 2006 Mumbai train blast case, Naveed Hussain Khan Rasheed walked free after the Bombay High Court acquitted him and 11 others, "prosecution had failed to prove the case". But freedom came with deep scars. Once a call center employee, Naveed lost years of his life, financial stability, education, and job prospects due to the terror allegations attached to his name. Struggling to rebuild his life after release, he found support through Miles2Smile, which helped him start a cloud kitchen. The source of livelihood eases Naveed's life, bringing happiness, creating stability and sensing freedom.
